What are Tannins?

Tannins are a natural organic material that is the byproduct of nature's fermentation process. They are created as water passes through peaty soil and decaying vegetation.

- Tannins occur in most locations where large quantities of vegetation are decaying.
- Tannins give water a faint yellow to tea-like color, which causes staining on fabrics, fixtures, china, and laundry.
- Tannins give water a tangy or tart aftertaste, and may also cause a musty or earthy odor.
